Write your own themed tour of the History of York.	You have chosen at least three sites. You have described each site. You have clearly identified a theme. You have not explained why these sites link to your theme.	You have chosen at least three sites. You have described each site using historical dates and vocabulary. You have a clear theme and you explain in detail how your sites link to this theme.	There is very good explanation of the sites visited. You have explained to your audience why you have put the tour in this order. The theme of your tour is very clear and you have made some links between the sites.	Your tour has clear theme and the sites are chosen appropriately. You may have even chosen an original theme to research. You use lots of historical evidence. You make it clear why you have put the sites in this order and your script explains how one site relates to the next.
What might this look like?	You are at The Barbican. There were some skeletons buried here from olden times. Lots of people died. The next place we are going to is....	Continuing our theme of York' fights against invasion we are now coming to the Barbican. The bodies of many civil war soldiers were found just outside the city walls and Historians believe they were part of Parliament's invading army.	We have just come from the city walls which were built in medieval times to protect the city. Our next site shows that these walls were very effective. We are now coming to the Barbican. The bodies of many civil war soldiers were found just outside the city walls and Historians believe they were part of Parliament's invading army. These soldiers were unable to break down York's walls.	We are now coming to the Barbican. These soldiers were unable to break down York's walls. The next site I will take you to marks the end of our story of Invasion. Micklegate Bar was the site where Parliament's victorious army marched through after the surrender of York in 1644. It was the most symbolic bar to enter as it had always been used by royalty. Fairfax and the Parliamentarian army were showing the people of York that they now had more power than the King.
